

The Behavior Bootcamp is a Path for Positive Change.

School safety has become one of the top concerns for educators and students alike. Teachers are under stress from behavior problems like never before, and solutions are urgently needed. CORE Methods has worked with school districts for years to use behavior improvement techniques that really work, with 83% of students who were in the acutely disturbed group being able to return to the classroom within one year.

Using knowledge of communication skills, nutrition, and mindfulness techniques, a path for positive change is created to support students, motivating them to find new ways to define their identities and roles within the community. Teachers find that students respond quickly to this approach based on behavior modification through growth. Parents report that their children are happier and calmer, and they communicate in more positive ways.

Training over 100 school districts a year with in-person sessions, CORE Methods saw a need for resources that can support schools immediately. This led to The Behavior Bootcamp, an online training with the same resources and knowledge used in live training.

Dr. Bethany Bilodeau works as a behaviorist to connect with students and help them to find their way through challenges. Her staff of trained professionals is deeply committed to making our schools and our students safe, productive, and happy. When students have support from caring professionals, they blossom and become active participants in community life, creating personal success.

These techniques have been used to train school safety officers in the art of de-escalation and brought peace of mind to them with better results within the school environment. They can be used for social workers and anyone who interacts with the public in matters that involve a need for compassionate understanding to defuse volatile situations.

The Behavior Bootcamp training is a way to get these proven techniques into schools and in the hands of educators and parents who need the support it provides. Short-form video, staff support, private chat groups, all contribute to the spread of this vital information. This invaluable contribution to the educational environment is a game-changer. Safety in the classroom, happy and productive students who love to learn. Isn't that what every educator wants?
